

KILLED WHILE SEEKING ESCAPE

Fleeing Prisoner Is Shot to Death by Sentry.

Atlanta, April 11.—The body of Lewis Persell, a military prisoner, who was shot and killed while trying to escape from Fort McPherson and desert the regular army Monday, was taken to the national cemetery at Marietta, Ga., Tuesday and buried without the usual honors given a regular soldier.

Persell had just finished unloading a lot of wood, and had climbed into the wagon and had started back for the corral. As he started hurrying the horses, Lawrence Lodlam, a private of company C, of the Seventeenth Infantry, who was acting as sentry, called him to halt. At first the prisoner seemed to hold the horses back, but immediately afterwards urged them ahead. The sentry called a second time to halt, and as Persell this time slapped the horses with his reins and crouched down in the wagon, Private Ludlam again commanded him to halt, and as this was disobeyed, fired. The bullet struck Persell in the back and entered his heart. While it was several minutes before the man expired, he fell forward instantly and death was painless.

Captain R. C. Davis, officer of the day, was also commander of Ludlam's company. Colonel Van Orsdale immediately investigated the case and Ludlam resumed his regular duty on guard, investigation with plenty of witnesses proving that he had carried out his duty as a soldier.

Crowe Bound Over to Court.

Macon, Ga., April 11.—Carl Crowe, the young white man implicated in the alleged robbery in which E. C.
